

ILLUSIONS OF ADULTING

by Sara Zimmerman

I'm really enjoying working with you.
But, it's been hours and we still can't find a solution on how to tactfully handle the oil spill PR while still making the oil company look good.

That's because our boss' suggestion of blaming it on malfunctioning equipment and the maintenance company is just scummy.

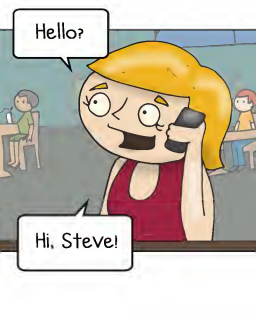

Well, what else do
you propose?

ring
ring

Hello?

Hi, Steve!

You made me
dinner? That is so sweet, but I already ate during this work
meeting with Ethan.

I'm sorry.

What? You were helping with the oil clean up all day
with the environmental groups at the beach?

Wow- you're
so amazing...

...which gives me
the best
idea!

Thanks, sweetie!

Ethan! I have the best idea!

We'll release a statement that our company will not only fund the required, minimal oil spill clean-up efforts, but will sponsor a larger, community effort, too.

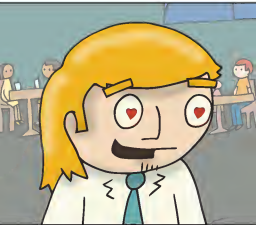

We'll not only help with the clean up, but will make it fun by bringing beer, food, and live music, which will entice local community members to help, making this into a unifying community clean-up event.

It will show the world that corporations can be environmentally responsible AND community-oriented. That should not only help the environment and the community, but will make the shareholders and my boss... errr, your uncle, happy.

That's brilliant, Hailey..
I am just so impressed
with you

I'll fine-tune the statement
for the press conference.
In the meantime, can you
contact the clean-up crews?

Wait... one problem: how are we ever going to book a band on such short notice
for tomorrow morning?

I have an idea...

TO BE CONTINUED...

by Sara Zimmerman / Unearthed Comics

Did you ever have a really good, positive idea for school or work that truly made the best out of a situation? Share in the comments below: